Washington, DC — Congressman Steve Rothman (D-NJ), a member of the House Appropriations Defense Subcommittee released the following statement:

"Veterans Day is a special time to remember and honor those selfless Americans who have served their country in our nation's armed forces. By gathering each November 11th to pay tribute to our veterans, we make certain to annually acknowledge our eternal gratitude to these American heroes who have courageously fought for our freedom and continue to keep us safe. It is not only important to remember our nation's obligations to these brave men and women, but also to teach our children about the heroism that makes our freedom possible. On this day, and every day, we must continue to advocate for our returning heroes, to protect the benefits that they and their families have earned. There is no more important job than keeping America safe and secure, and our heroes deserve the very best that our country has to offer both while they are in active service and when they come home."
